MORAN MONTHLY DIGEST

Insights From Our Founder

Dear Valued Client,

This month, the stock market has achieved a remarkable milestone, with the S&P 500 hitting a new all-time high of 4,927.93 on January 30th. This has historically been a bullish signal for stocks as the occurrence of new highs generally foreshadows an above-average performance in the following months. However, a closer examination of the broader economic indicators and consumer behavior paints a significantly more complex picture. This juxtaposition is central to our economic commentary, where we will aim to dissect these seemingly incongruent narratives and provide a clear-eyed perspective on their potential future implications.

Consumer Behavior: A Closer Look

Despite the stock market reaching record highs, the American consumer is painting a very different story. There's a notable increase in consumer debt, with default rates climbing to worrying levels; for instance, defaults on used cars have now surpassed the peak levels observed in 2008. This financial strain is further evidenced by a shift in tax behavior, where individuals are withholding less, potentially leading to significant unforeseen tax liabilities.

In parallel, there's a distressing shift towards increased reliance on layaway plans, underscoring a concerning scarcity of cash reserves among consumers. This issue dovetails with the housing sector's challenges, where mortgage delinquencies are climbing, and real estate affordability has plummeted to a 20-year low.

Such conditions are due to soaring home prices and mortgage rates, which, in turn, pressurize the rental market and exert a substantial impact on the Consumer Price Index (CPI).

Further complicating the financial landscape is the growing trend of borrowing against 401K plans, which shines a light on the acute liquidity crunch many are facing. Compounding this issue is the reluctance of banks to extend credit, primarily due to fears of increased government regulation. This hesitance forces consumers towards high-interest credit options, perpetuating a cycle that historically does not bode well.

The Dissonance of Market Dynamics

Amid these signs of dwindling U.S. consumer strength, the stock market's performance appears even more incongruent when considering other underlying economic fundamentals. Notably, corporate debt is poised to escalate due to rising interest payments, potentially eroding corporate profits. In parallel, the labor market exhibits signs of stress, with reductions in temporary help and work hours, often precursors to broader economic downturns. Despite a continuous decline in leading indicators for a staggering 20 months and the presence of the largest historic inverted yield curve—a traditional harbinger of recessions—the stock market has maintained its upward trajectory.

This paradox is starkly evident when considering market valuations, which have soared to all-time highs even amidst a downturn in corporate earnings for four of the last five quarters. The inflated Price-Earnings (PE) ratio, coupled with a market concentration heavily skewed towards a handful of tech stocks, presents a puzzling scenario for investors.

However, 2024 may herald a shift. We believe that stocks that excelled in 2022, particularly dividend and value stocks, may return in favor. There's a discernible opportunity in non-mega cap stocks – large caps, mid-caps, and small caps – which are currently priced more attractively relative to tech giants.

Insights From Our Founder Cont.

Coupled with this, if historical patterns hold true in this presidential election year, a positive market finish is likely, as seen in 19 out of the last 23 elections dating back to 1928. Such periods have typically yielded a market's annual return averaging 11.0% when a Democrat incumbent is succeeded by another Democrat, and an average of 12.9% when the baton passes from a Democrat to a Republican. Building on this historical context, we are predicting a "barbell" pattern with stronger performance in Q1 and Q4, and a softer middle of the year, culminating in the year with moderate single-digit gains at the end of 2024.

Strategic Insights and Investment Directions

In light of these observations, we favor value over growth stocks for 2024. Value stocks, trading at about half the PE rate and not having fully participated in the recent market upsurge, present attractive opportunities. Historically, the risk premium, the excess return over a risk-free rate, is low; value stocks tend to outperform in such scenarios.

Moreover, sectors like utilities, which underperformed last year, historically tend to rebound strongly. This pattern reinforces our confidence in a strategic pivot towards dividend-yielding and value stocks.

Closing Thoughts

As we navigate this period of discordant economic signals and market dynamics, we are committed to providing you with insightful, data-driven economic commentary. We believe that a nuanced understanding of these market dynamics, coupled with a strategic, diversified approach to investment, can turn these challenges into opportunities for growth and stability.

We value your trust and are here to support you every step of the way. Should you have any questions or wish to discuss your investment strategy further, please do not hesitate to contact us.

Warm regards,

FEATURED STRATEGY

Strategic Growth (GROW)

This month we would like to highlight our Strategic Growth (GROW).

Our Strategic Growth strategy seeks long-term capital appreciation by investing in high growth companies. To achieve this goal, the manager will invest primarily in a range of small to large capitalization companies that, in the manager's opinion, will demonstrate consistent top line or sales growth. This strategy, by itself, is not a balanced investment plan and may not be appropriate for investors with a lower risk tolerance.

The strategy is a complex investment vehicle and may not be suitable for all investors. It does not represent a complete investment program.

For more information on GROW and other strategies, please visit: Moran Wealth Strategies

Your financial advisor will begin building your portfolio by first identifying your unique investment style based on a variety of factors, such as income, risk tolerance, diversification, investment and financial goals, and preferred market exposure. This will help us select a suitable strategy for you, allowing us to use a personalized approach to asset allocation and securities selection that meets your needs and yields the desired short-and long-term results.
